

Christmas Comic

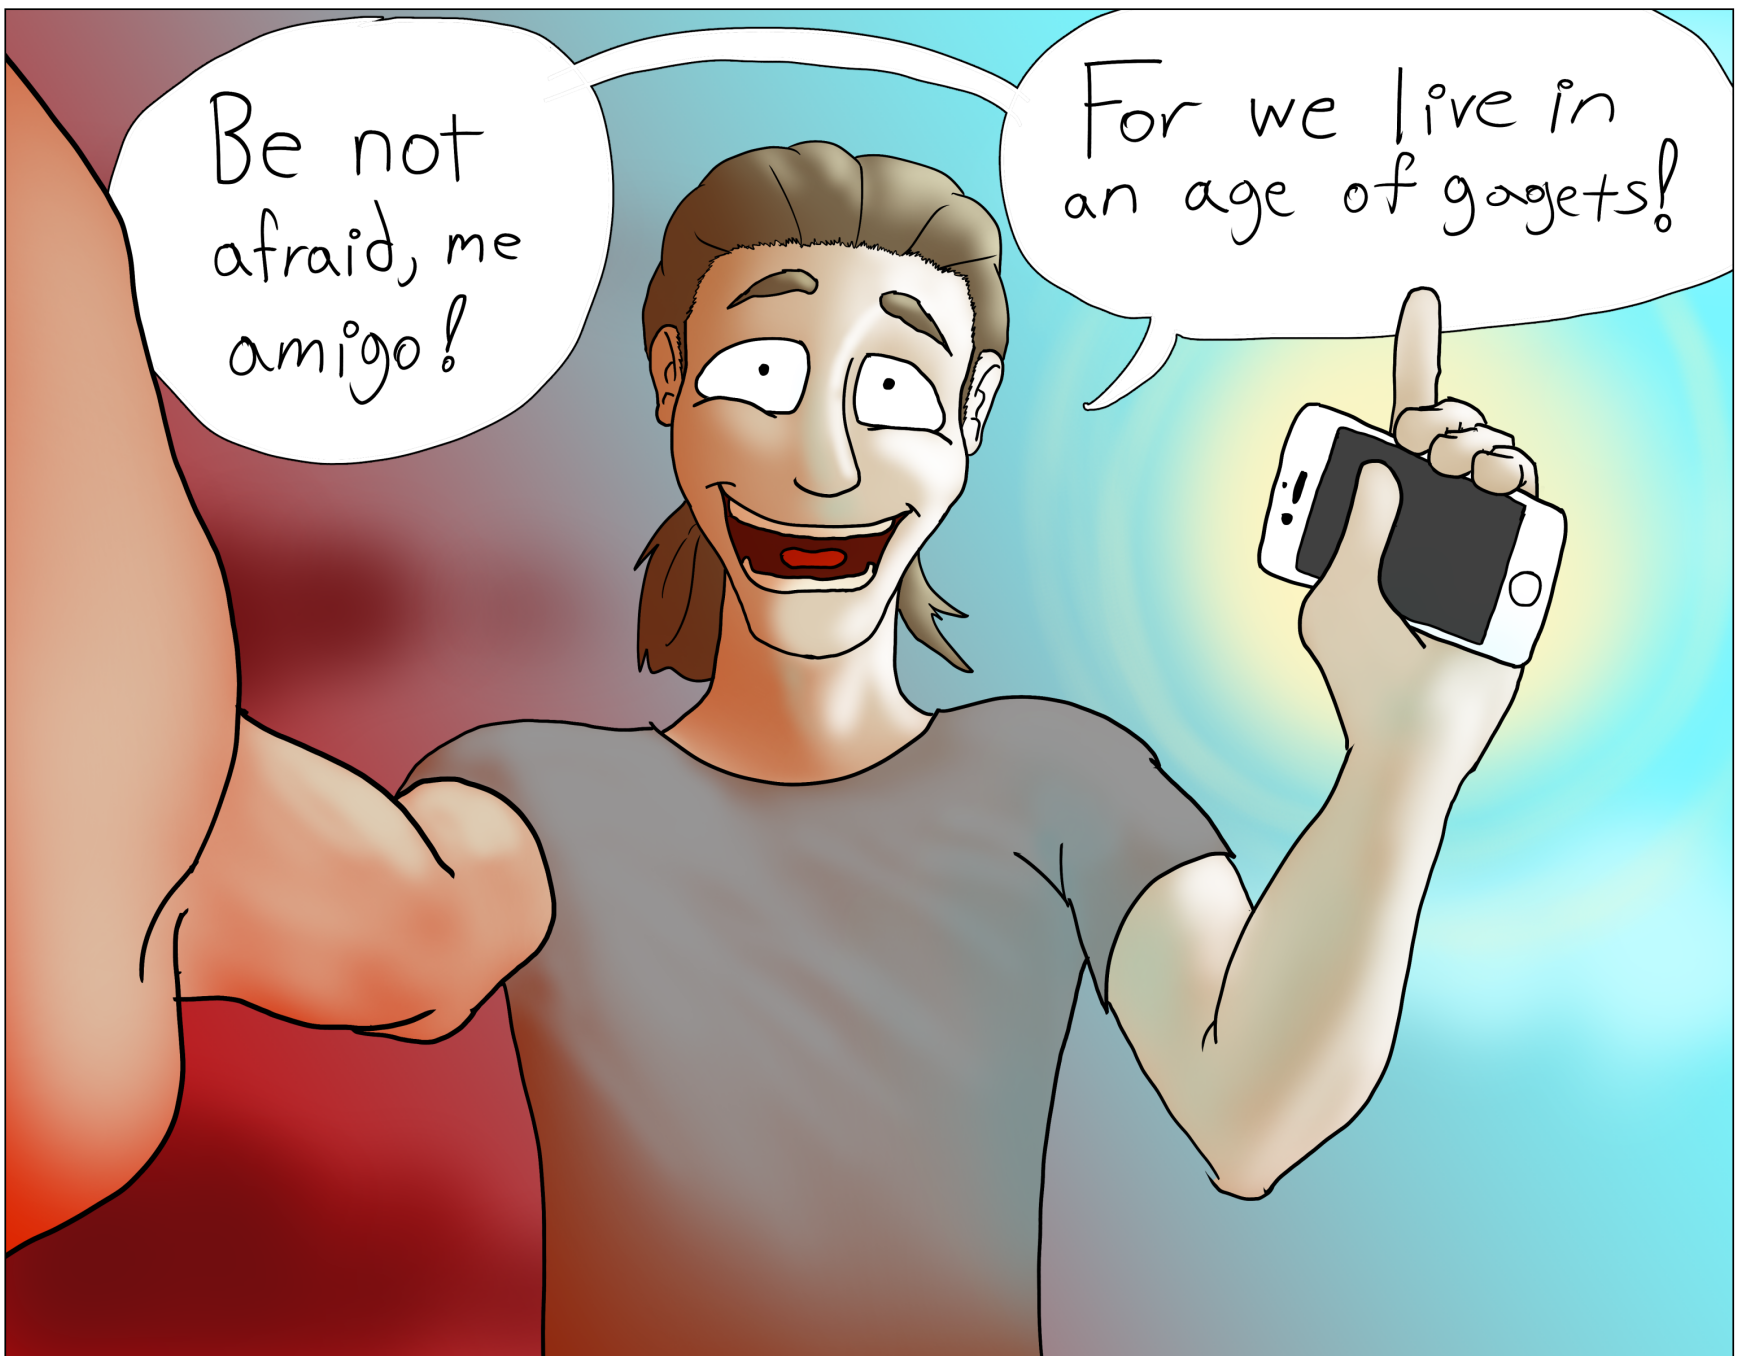

I know things have happened this year...

But it's now August & I can't place them.

Be not afraid, me amigo!

For we live in an age of gadgets!

This strange talisman, it remembers
ALL!

Photos!
With dates!

Months

APPAS

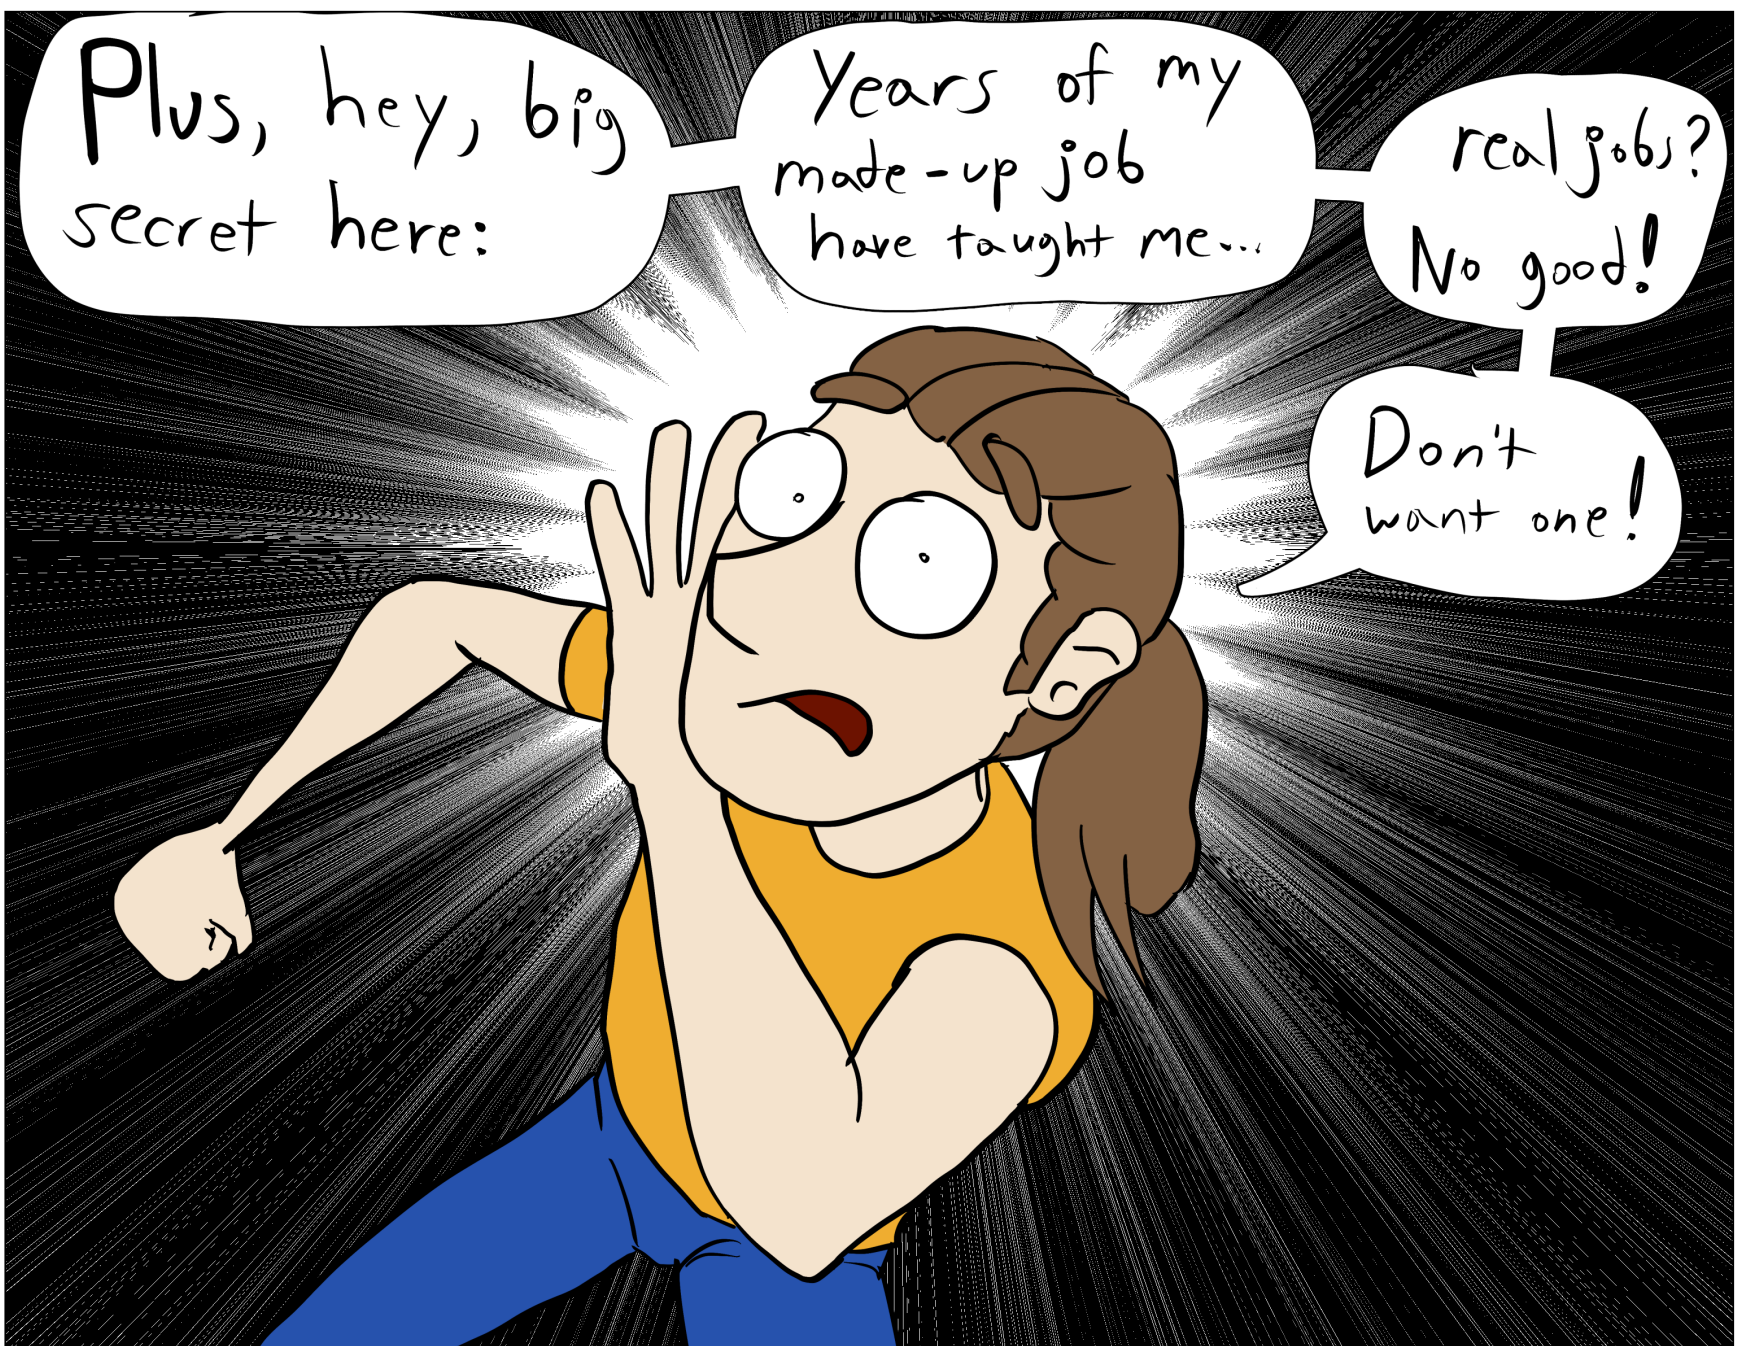

And of eourse... Like a few months after I put 2 year's worth of savings to work...

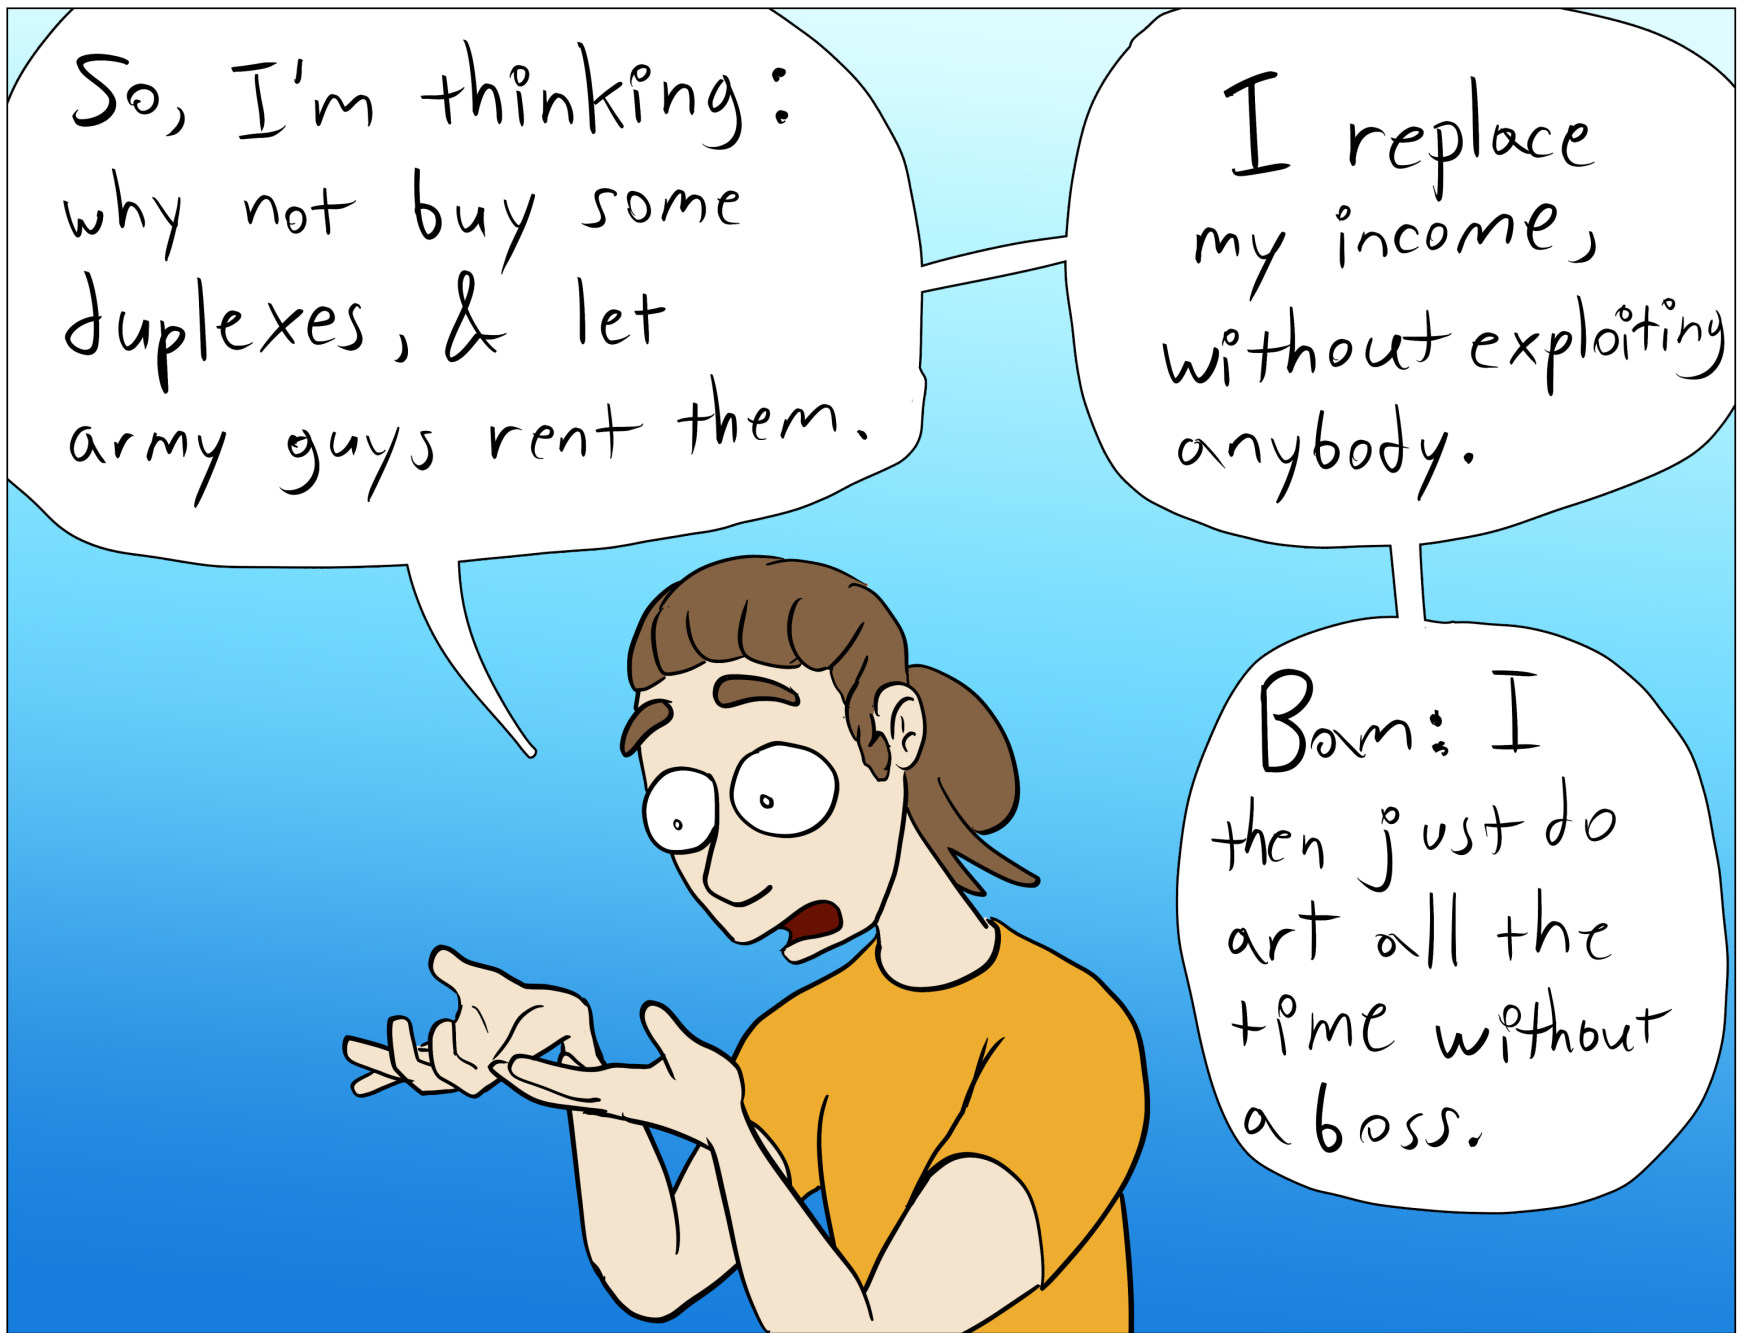

New Zealand started reopening their borders.

So like, I'm debt-free for the first time in my adult life.

And the money I put into the stocks has gained 33% value.

But, I still want to go to New Zealand.

Sooooo...
What else, what else...

Ah, yes: I did a bunch of art jobs this year.

Nothing like earth-shaking but still.

I'm learning to charge for my work.

Man, what's a nice, pretentious way to wrap this up?

I guess just, there's every reason to be optimistic about the future.

Like I know all media insists to you that things are going wrong, & it's these guys causing it.

But all media, tv or twitter or whatever; it exists to make money.

And strong emotion really drives engagement, & stacks that CASH.

I've been watching the markets & tech this year.

And you would not believe how much private money is going into clean energy, clean transportation, & recycling infrastructure for batteries & photovoltaics.

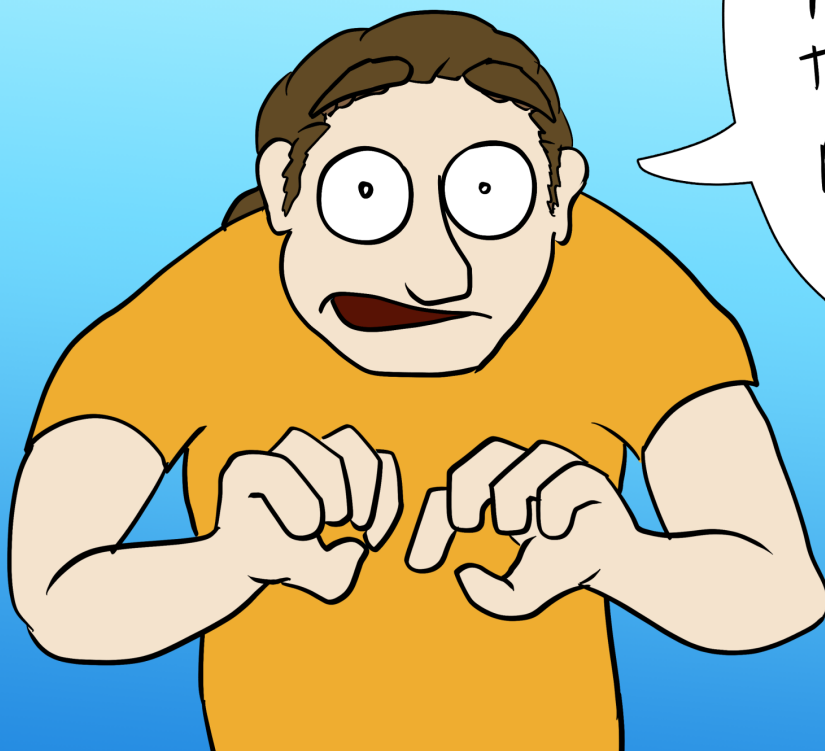

Since 2019, it's been exploding!

And that's PRIVATE money: that's guys whose job it is to see what's gonna come good on the balance sheet.

"Follow the money" that's what they say?

The money tells a positive story!

Gee, maybe the fact that seeing threats & decay is easy might be why your "news" is just cherry-picked half-stories of other people being bad!

I dunno

What if, as we reflexively consume our daily media, we think about how many radically-different generations came before us, & how they all reckoned things were going wrong, & yet we're still here & we're working it out.

Anyways, happy Christmas!

Happy New Year!

Another year in the win column, byeeee
